Last evening, a letter was received from Captain Mack Gamble, master of the packet W. J. Cunmins, recently running in the Wheeling and Cincinnati trade independently, in answer to the request of the local musical club that he give his terms for chartering the boat to the club for the trip to Cincinnati and return. Captain Gamble says that the Cummins wil soon re-enter the Wheeling and Cincinnati trade, so she cannot be chartered, but he states that the time of her departure from both Wheeling and Cincinnati on her requiar weekly trip will make it possible for the club to use the boat. Her time of departure from this port on the down-trip is Saturday at 5 p. m., but Captain Gamble says he can delay his departure until midnight, if necessary. "THE SPAN OF LIFE."

Beginning Monday, William Calder's powerful company will present for a half week at the Grand Opera House, that unique and highly successful play, "The Span of Life." The piece is a mel-odrama of intense interest and allows excellent scope for scenic display and highly dramatic situations. At no time during the performance does interest lag for an instant. There is enough comedy interwoven to break the monotony and furnish food for laughter. The company is much better than any Attired as Arabs, Blunt's friends take him before Leech as prisoner. As soon as Leech turns his back, Blunt and his wife and child are released. They fly to the mountains. Blunt's friends cross a chasm by means of a bridge. Ere it is reached by Blunt with his wife and child, the Arabs buttler for their cancel. nunting for their escaped prisoners, ap pear, and throw the bridge into the chasm just as the fugitives reach it. The Arabs have discovered them, and are approaching with hideous yells. Then is formed 'The Span of Life,' from the other side of the chasm, and the heroine and her child cross over. The Donizetti trio of acrobats have been several for this secured for this engagement, and in addition to forming this wonderful bridge, introduce a number of their splendid feats.

As often the cup of Joy is dashed from his lips, and the only result of his investigations is to suily the fair fame of maid and matron and spread universal dismay and-consternation. His amiable nature leads him to take upon himself the difficulties and dangers of others, and he finds himself, accordingly, burdened temporarily with a wife, other than he seeks, and is compelled to pose as friend and protector to one of the most frisky and compromising of music hall artists. The major and Dick have a good time, even if they do get caught enjoying themselves now and then by Mrs. Cotton, and the comedy ends as it should—very happily.
